

When I was in the first grade, my teacher asked my class to draw pictures of what we wanted to be when we grew up. In my never-ending plot to destroy all my mother's dreams of raising an elegant young lady, I drew myself, clad in cargo shorts and hiking boots, holding a shovel. It was then that I proclaimed I would one day be a paleontologist. I owned every dinosaur encyclopedia imaginable, believed fully that the science in Jurassic Park could be implemented in real life, and even memorized names of dinosaurs for fun. This became a cool party trick which obviously made me super popular.

I went on to have many other big dreams, from becoming a teen actress on Disney Channel (though the peak of my fame would end up being my performance as Mrs. Potts in my high school's production of Beauty and the Beast), to working for Pixar as an animator, to now, aspiring to be a copywriter. Through all the stages of my life, I have always thrown myself into my dreams with everything in me. I work hard, I learn quickly, and I'm good at what I do.

Here's a few reasons you should hire me:

1. I have mild insomnia. Need someone to stay late and come in early? I'm your girl.
2. I make way too many puns. Some good, most bad. Don't worry, I don't incorporate them into my work. The point is, my mind is constantly cranking out clever, catchy lines. (I may also enjoy the occasional alliteration)
3. I hate being alone. I'm a people person, and I love collaborating with others to make amazing work that neither of us could have done on our own.

I'm ready to hit the ground running; I just need a place to start.
